the breeze flows by,
and I bend to the side.
The sun warms my face,
so I spread my petals wide.

The energy flows down
from my face to the stem.
Around it tumbles and stirs
lightening me like a gem.

I stretch my long leaves
as far as they will go.
Draw more light in my arms,
and it joins the energy flow.

My feet are below me
in a deep, rich darkness.
They search near and far
for nutrients I must harness.

When they find those I need,
these small drops of life,
I draw them inside me,
a useful tool like a knife.

The parts that I take
I let flow through my body.
They mix and they blend.
All of their strength I embody.

This new power spreads
through my legs, feet, and head.
I no longer feel small.
I am growing much larger instead.

I am greater than before,
but now I must give back.
I release oxygen in the air
as a thank you for this snack.
